Free service will benefit 200 million netizens in China

(February 27, 2008 – Hong Kong) Kingsoft Corporation Limited (HKSE: 3888), one of China's leading entertainment and applications software developers, distributors and service providers, announced a strategic partnership with Baidu, the largest Chinese language internet search provider, to launch a free internet security service that will benefit as many as 200 million users in China.

The newly launched service called Baidu Security Centre is a comprehensive solution that includes anti-virus, anti-spyware, Internet browser recovery, system recovery, among others. Users can download this via <http://an.baidu.com>.

"This strategic partnership with Baidu highlights both our companies' commitment to make surfing the Web more secured for Chinese users. By combining Kingsoft's enhanced technology and solid experience in anti-virus solutions, Baidu's online platform will now become one of the safest and worry-free site in cyberspace," said Ms. Wang Xin, Assistant President and Deputy General Manager of Kingsoft's Application Software Department.

Kingsoft and Baidu strongly believe that the demand for network security will rapidly grow and become even more popular among users in the near future. The adoption of Kingsoft's anti-virus expertise on Baidu Security Centre will make it much more user-friendly, which aligns with the market trend of the internet security service industry.
